The Tiger Is Poised to Leap
 Politics, Power, and Markets in South-East Asia

2008 · 330 pages, hardcover

Asia is playing the music of 21st century markets, with China and India occupying the central focus of public perception. But what about the smaller South East Asian nations – Singapore, Thailand, and Indonesia – that also belong to the greater Asian economic zone? What role will they play?

Karl Pilny has compiled an exciting and knowledgeable inventory of the current situation in South East Asia and envisions a convincing scenario for future economic and social development in the ASEAN nations.

Karl Pilny holds a doctoral degree in law. He is one of Germany's most profound authorities on Asia and a specialist in international commercial law. He works as a business attorney in the Berlin office of the international law firm of Salans LLP.

Dance of the Giants
 India and China Are Shaping the World

2006 · 372 pages, hardcover

The global economy's center of gravity is shifting increasingly to Asia, primarily to India and China. Taken together, these two countries account for one third of the world's population, and their economies are immensely dynamic. This is the first book to analyze the economies, politics and cultures of the two countries, as well as their bilateral ties. The author suggests possible scenarios for the world economy and global politics.

The Asian Century
 China and Japan Emerge As
 New World Powers

2005 · 340 pages, hardcover

From a historical perspective, the relationship between the economic powerhouses, Japan and China, has been tense and fraught with conflict. Collectively, however, they may emerge as the new superpower of the 21st century. Karl Pilny explains the economic and political developments in East Asia and presents the first discussion of relations between Asia's most powerful economies and their global ramifications.
